Organisational Behaviour for NGOs Course

In a work environment, sourcing, retaining and maintaining a highly motivated human capital is one of the most difficult challenges organizations face in the world today. This is usually compounded by misconceptions of how to manage people and how to run organisations. Centre for Infectious Disease Research in Zambia (CIDRZ) is calling for enrolment applications for a short course in Organisation Behaviour for NGOs. In this short course, you will gain insights on how to manage people in the organization and assist leadership/managers to understand themselves before they can endeavour to understand the people they manage.
